❖ About Machine Learning

Machine learning is a type of artificial intelligence (AI) that provides computers with the ability to learn without being explicitly programmed. Machine learning focuses on the development of computer programs that can change when exposed to new data. The process of machine learning is similar to that of data mining. Both systems search through data to look for patterns. However, instead of extracting data for human comprehension as is the case in data mining applications machine learning uses that data to detect patterns in data and adjust program actions accordingly. Example: Facebook's News Feed uses machine learning to personalize each member's feed.

Which one to choose?

- When to choose Supervised machine learning and unsupervised machine learning?
- Choose Supervised learning if
  - You have to decide if the tumor is 'Benign or Malignant'
  - You have to decide if the user is 'Authorized or Unauthorized'
  - You have to decide if the email is 'Spam' or 'Not Spam'
  - You have to recognize the face from all the faces
  - You have to recognize the numeral from all 10 numerals
  - You have to recognize the English character from all 26 characters
- You need to do Classification

Participants: Aditya Rathod, Anant Bhide, Anurag Dewkar, Aparna More, Apurva Rajhe, Arjun Tarfane, Arshi Devaraj, Ashwini Chavan

Morning Session: 13 May 2020 (Batch-03)

Supervised learning

- Here algorithms learn from input and output pairs of samples.
- They learn under the supervision of a 'Teacher'
- The Teacher teaches what should be the desired output for each given input
- Database collection is a crucial task
- With given input and output pair, the algorithm finds a way to produced the desired output in training phase
- While in the testing phase, the algorithm produces the output when an input is applied. This input might not be seen previously seen by the algorithm
- Used for Classification and Regression
